Besides Parreno, if there's another artist on everyone's lips in London this week it's American artist Donna Huanca, who currently has a much-talked about solo show at the Zabudowicz Collection and is also participating at the superb group show at David Roberts Art Foundation, titled "Streams of Warm Impermanence."

Much has been said about Huanca's use of female nudes in her performances and installations. At the booth of the Berlin gallery, her paintings took center stage, evidencing Huanca's pictorial gift, using texture and color to create layered and seducing compositions, which command prices ranging from $15,000 to $60,000.
