

Written on October 3, 2016 by art|lead.

Editorial

Ten things you shouldn't miss during Frieze Week in London

London's art fair Frieze is opening later this week. With countless international collectors, curators and other art world professionals visiting London for the week, the city's institutions all open their new exhibitions, marking the beginning of London's new exhibition season. With so many things happening around the city, we selected ten exhibitions you shouldn't miss while in London.

Donna Huanca at Zabudowicz Collection

Courtesy of the artist, Zabudowicz Collection and Pares Projects. Photographs by Goedele Bartholomeussen & Anita Zabudowicz

Donna Huanca's exhibition is the first performance-led commission at the Zabudowicz Collection, with daily performances from painted models activating a series of new site-responsive architectural and sculptural installations. Huanca's work draws attention to the body and in particular the skin, which is simultaneously the surface on which our personhood is inscribed and the surface through which we experience the world around us. Huanca examines conventions of behaviour in our interaction with bodies in space and the invisible histories that are accumulated through those gestures. By exposing the naked body and concealing it under layers of paint, cosmetics and latex, Huanca's performers confront our instinctive reactions to flesh, which becomes both a familiar, decorative object and an abstract, inaccessible subject.

Zabudowicz Collection
176 Prince of Wales Road
29 September – 18 December 2016