OPENING THIS WEEK'S BEST NEW EXHIBITIONS

↑ Donna Huanca

Daily performances in this show will see naked models concealed under layers of paint, cosmetics and Latex performing within a three-storey glass structure inside this former church. We reckon it might be one of the best shows of the autumn, and almost definitely the most blasphemous. Say your hail Marys in advance.
→ Zabłudowicz Collection.
⊖ Chalk Farm. Thu Sep 29-Dec 18.

Antony Gormley

The Gorminator – as he's known to his friends – returns with another show of massive sculptures of himself. They'll be big, they'll be impressive, and they'll make you want to add '-inator' to your last name too.
→ White Cube Bermondsey.
⊖ Southwark.

Guerrilla Girls

This anonymous group of female artists has been sticking two fingers up at the sexist art establishment for decades. They're exactly what a modern museum needs, a swift kick in the bollocks, and this time they'll be aiming their boots at the Whitechapel's metaphorical groin. Kapow!

→ Whitechapel Art Gallery.
⊖ Aldgate East. Sat Oct 1-Mar 5.

Helen Marten

Putting the 'art' in 'Marten', this Turner Prize nominee brings her intricate, messed up, trashy, cobbled-together-yet-beautiful sculptural installations to the Serpentine's smaller gallery.

→ Serpentine Gallery.
⊖ Lancaster Gate.
Thu Sep 29-Nov 20.

Bonnie Camplin

Okay, ready? For this show, Camplin will be continuing her investigation into the nature of consciousness and the sensory means we use to perceive the world, exploring principles of energy and information transference through morphic fields and qualia channels. Got it? Good. (No, honestly, this will probably be great).

→ Camden Arts Centre.
⊖ Finchley Rd. Fri Sep 30-Jan 8.

Bedwyr Williams: The Gulch

The Welsh artist is the latest brave soul to take on the Barbican Curve space, formerly home to a rain room and a nude rollerskater. He's apparently bringing a talking goat and a depressed hypnotist for this installation, so let's see how that works out, huh?

→ Barbican Centre.
⊖ Barbican. Wed Sep 28-Jan 7.
