10 exhibitions not to miss at this year's Gallery Weekend Berlin

Here's our guide of the must-see exhibits at the 15th edition of the prestigious art festival

The annual Gallery Weekend Berlin confirms the city's status as a leader in the contemporary art world and thriving hub for creatives and curators alike. Now in its 15th year, the festival promises to showcase an array of established and emerging talents as well as highlighting new art spaces across the German capital. Directed by Maike Cruse, the event is also supported by Olivier Audemars, Vice Chairman of the Board of Directors for Swiss watch manufacturer Audemars Piguet. With 45 galleries participating in this year's event, the city is poised to host a multitude of chic opening soirees, unique performances and exhibitions that are sure to spark artistic inspiration aplenty. Our tip? Plan ahead. To make things a little easier for you, here is our top 10 guide of what not to miss on this year's bill.

Beth Letain at Peres Projects

The second solo exhibition of Berlin-based artist Beth Letain at Peres Projects, ultrapath, will open during Gallery Weekend. The artist's series of large-format abstract paintings feature Malevich-style forms of brightly coloured stripes, squares, stacks, and slabs. While her minimalist canvases strike a joyous and playful chord, the spaces in between the suspended blocks of colour connote certain emotional nuances and highlight a more considered approach than the viewer may perceive at first glance.
