A sense of urgency predominates British artist Rebecca Ackroyd's works, and in 100mph—the title of her current exhibition at Peres Projects in Berlin—that energy reaches a fever pitch.

In the new works, Ackroyd renders close-up, cropped-in images of ripped tights, leather studs, coils of hair, which together hint at some larger unseen unfolding narrative. One could imagine these are snippets from the life of an unknown protagonist as she navigates through an urban dystopia.
