With galleries shuttering around the world, it's easy to get dejected. As news of art fairs and online viewing rooms dominate the art press, prospects for new exhibition spaces can seem grim. Yet the following eight galleries have opted to launch new spaces in 2020, revealing that the prognosis for brick-and-mortar art shops may not be so bleak. The following openings—spread across New York, London, Hong Kong, and Rome—reveal that dealers are still enthusiastic about developing fresh gallery programming and finding new business models. The gallery is not dead. Long live the gallery!

Mammoth, London

3 Endsleigh Street

Opening February 27, 2020

This new gallery, in the heart of Bloomsbury, boasts elegant, refurbished Georgian architecture. Shanghai collectors Jiafeng and Litian He, who share expertise in the Chinese art market, will curate contemporary art shows in the three exhibition spaces, across 1,800 square feet. Their opening presentations include a solo show with the young Swiss painter Lenz Geerk and a group show featuring Anthony Cudahy, Dominique Fung.
